Description :

PDF-46009 | During the Russian Civil War, the Red Army created a series of fortified areas, or ukreplinyje rajony (UR), which were to be used not only for defence but were also to act as staging points for offensive operations. Following the end of the war these defences were extended, creating a front that stretched over 2,000km from the Baltic to the Black Sea, that consisted of more than 3,000 positions f... The Stalin and Molotov Lines: Soviet Western Defences 1928–41 (Fortress)
